

Dear FCC,

Satellite radio is an absolute wonderful tool. Please do not limit what can be broadcast with it, just have the other catch up. I live in Indiana and make trips up to Chicago several times a month. Right now it is great to click to the Chicago traffic before I get close because about 90 minutes away I have a choice of three directions to enter the city from, if I wait until I can pick up the station, I have missed the three way split. Eliminating the information from satellite radio in this day and age seems absurd. If you take it off of this type of radio will you also ban it from the internet, that internet that I can cell dial into and get traffic reports and weather if I wanted to. The answer is \"NO\", it is information and if people want it they should be able to receive it no matter what their form of transmission may be.

Thank you for considering my thoughts on this matter.

Sincerely,

Jim Edwards
